This is the view of a current problem taken by a prominent Philadelphian interviewed by the Philadelphia Stockholder: "The Pennsylvania railroad is perhaps the typical American railroad, and its capital expenses are enormous every year. About the only property that can compare with it in magnitude is the Atchison, which has 9,344 miles, while the Pennsylvania has 8,900 miles. The Atchison has been sharply criticised for its issue of second mortgage B bonds, which could be used each year to the extent of $5,000,000 for im-provements, while the first fours could be issued ut the rate of $20,000 per mile for extensions and donole track. The Pennsylvania railroad in 1893 held down to this amount of money, would have been in poor condition. The Pennsylvania company has been compelled to reduce its freight rates on iron shipments from Pittsburg to Chicago, Detroit, Cincinnati and other western points, the cut ranging from 4 cents a ton to 75 according to dis-tance. For several weeks past rail-roads running out of Cleveland to western points have been making a cut in rates on iron and steel, which naturally led Pittsburg shippers to send their products west to Cleveland over the Cleveland and Pittsburg rail-road and thence to more distant points over the rate cutting lines. While the Pennsylvania company se-cured the business as far as Cieveland, it lost it for points west, and nothing in a Little Springtime Talking Con- was left for it to do but to arrange its rates to meet the cuts of other roads. Birds in Tog of War.

Two sparrows one big, the other little -simultaneously swooped down upon a piece of cotton cord in front of the City Hall the other day. Both wanted it and both pulled, but without visible advantage to either bird. Then began a real tug of ward or zigzagged from side to side he was with him every time. In fact he let the big one cut out all the work, and it was plain to the crowd of people who stood watching the strife that the big bird was wearing himself out. This proved to be true. Suddenly the little one, seizing a favorable opportunity, made a sharp down ward rush, instantly followed by a quick upward dash and the cord was jerked out of the tired beak of his rival. But in making the effort the prize fell from his own bill. For a single second it floated in the air, then the little victor quickly seized it, and with a tiny screech of triumph flew away unrablested by the larger bird.

ly handicapped in the matter of weight, but this he more than made up in skill and firmly braced on the asphalt walk and pulled with all their might. Finding their efforts against each other fatile, they, with a common impulse, flew upward without relaxing their hold upon the coveted object, and continued in midair the struggle for the string.

Once off the ground the smaller sparrow appeared to figure more conspicuously, for while his foe seemed to fancy that weight would tell in the end the little bird adopted shrewly dactics. When the big bird flew he flew with him, and when he darted upward or zigzagged from side to side he was with him every time. In fact he let the big one cut out all the reach.

This little tug of war only lasted two or three minutes, but it was a show worth seeing.—New York Herald.

Quickly Popular.

In the book entitled "Famous English Authors of the Nineteenth Century," Mrs. Sarah K. Bolton gives some facts in regard to the instant popularity of the poem "Marmion." by Sir Walter Scott.

In less than a month after "Marmion" was published the first edition of 2,000 copies was sold. It went rapidly through many editions. The people read and reread it. The following story told by Hutton is not at all improbable:

Two strangers met on a dark night in London. Both were repeating the last lines of the account of Flodden Field. One man exclaimed "Charge, Chester, charge!" when suddenly a reply came out of the darkness "On, Stanley, on" whereupon they finished the death of Marmion between them, took off their hats to each other, and parted, laughing.
